A Boeing 777 was lost, some of us asks themselves how come in a era of "the internet of al things" someone can loose a huge aircraft?

I've just got my eyes on this great Time Lapse from NATS air traffic controllers, it seem to speak for itself why. But still we definitely can do better at this…

The disappointing thing, is that people which are supposed to "watch over us" and which years ago were able to find a tennis ball in my backyard, seem to be completely off on this one. Just wonder why?

To the people which can and should do something about it…

More than 200 people may need help or may have lost their lives, we have the technology to find out in seconds where things are. I believe is time to do it. Let's try think out of the "cheap business box" and try elevate ourselves from taking decisions base don the "body count".
