

My heart and soul pours out for all the souls lost and injured in Vegas.

For a while I've avoided being caught in this continuous show of human madness out there. Where do we go from here? What is next?

I can't talk for any one of you but I do know what I will be doing, I'll be refusing to live in fear and be looking for a solution of this complex problem, a problem which is unfortunately mostly of our own making. Whatever the solution will it be it must not use or even imply violence of any kind and not infringe in our liberties. Can we find it? I believe we can. We really need to “get out of the mental box we live in” and experience new abilities drawn from factual knowledge and empathy for all living things. All types of social organization we tried failed to keep us safe and allow us to grow at the speed we are able to, it is time for us to search for something better for all living things humans and beyond.

The issue is this will not be of any use to any of the people already dead from our own madness. Guns are felt as simple solutions for complex problems, but there is not such thing as simple solution for complex problems we are only lying to ourselves.
